USING CROSSREF.ORG TO FIND OUT IF A JOURNAL ARTICLE HAS BEEN ASSIGNED A DOI NUMBER

References

Please note that according to the APA format style - 6th edition – you must include the DOI (Digital Object Identifier) number if the journal article has been assigned a DOI number. If the article has not been assigned a DOI number, give the URL of the journal home page. The easiest way to determine whether or not an article has been assigned a DOI number is to: (Magazine and newspaper articles do not have a doi number.)

1. Go to the CrossRef web site – www.crossref.org –
2. Click on the “FOR RESEARCHERS” tab just above “Metadata Search”
3. Scroll down to the link “Free DOI Name Lookup” and click
4. Scroll to the lower part of the page to “search on article title”
5. Type in the last name of the first author
6. Type in the full title of the article
7. If the article has a DOI number, it will be displayed. Copy and paste the DOI number into the citation at the end (Please note there are two different ways the DOI can be displayed in the citation – see examples above)
8. If the article does not have a DOI number, go to Google and type in the title of the journal to find the URL of the home page of the journal. Copy and paste the URL of the home page of the journal into the citation after “Retrieved from”
